PREFACE

This paper is a computer-based statistical summary of Soviet agricultural commodity trade during the period 1960-76. It is meant to be a research aid and, as such, includes only a short section describing the major events and trends in this trade during the 17-year period. The data is presented in as varied a format as practical to allow the greatest flexibility of analysis. Soviet trade is broken down both by commodity and by regional grouping of trading partners.

The only comparable compendium, the United Nation's Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO) Trade Yearbook, provides data on total Soviet agricultural commodity trade broken down by commodity but not by country of origin or destination. FAO statistics for total Soviet agricultural commodity trade are not precisely comparable to those in this report because of somewhat different coverage. For example, FAO includes some manufactured goods not in our coverage such as tobacco manufactures and distilled alcoholic beverages while excluding others, such as groats, that are in our compilation.

BACKGROUND AND TRENDS

The USSR is one of the world's largest producers of agricultural commodities. Compared to other countries, it ranks first in the production of wheat, barley, potatoes, sugar beets, and cotton, among others. Overall, farm output accounts for more than one-fifth of Soviet gross national product and employs nearly one-fourth of the labor force.<sup>1</sup> As a result, Soviet agricultural production has a major impact on the economy's overall performance. Since the death of Stalin in the early 1950s, successive Soviet administrations have spent enormous sums on programs to increase farm output and efficiency in order to raise standards of living. In the current five-year plan period (1976-80), the Soviets intend to devote one-quarter of total investment funds to the agricultural sector.

Despite the massive resource commitment and real progress in boosting farm output, the USSR does not produce the quantity and quality of farm products demanded by consumers at current levels of income and prices. Moreover, major fluctuations in farm output, coupled with an official policy of restraining retail prices at fixed levels, have led to major year-to-year changes in the gap between supply and demand. As a result, the USSR has been a large but inconstant net importer of farm commodities. During 1960-76, imports exceeded exports in every year except one.

Agricultural commodity trade constitutes a large portion of total Soviet trade, and is an important factor in world commodity markets. In 1976, trade in farm products was 15 percent of total trade, with agricultural imports representing one-fourth of total imports. In the same year, the USSR was the world's fifth largest agricultural importer, taking almost 7 percent of world imports. Much less important as a world exporter, the USSR ranked 13th with 2 percent of total exports.

<sup>1</sup> By way of contrast, US agriculture in 1976 contributed just 3 percent of GNP and employed 4 percent of the labor force.

Significant changes have taken place in Soviet agricultural commodity trade since 1960:

- The gap between farm product imports and exports widened considerably. In current dollar values,<sup>2</sup> imports increased at an average annual rate of about 13 percent while exports grew by only 4 percent. As a result, a relatively small trade deficit of $91.6 million in this category in 1960 grew to a whopping $7.2 billion by 1976 (figure 1). The agricultural deficit with the hard currency countries grew from $81.6 million in 1960 to almost $3.5 billion in 1976.
- Grain imports increased dramatically and were a major factor in boosting total Soviet imports of agricultural commodities. After a long tradition as a net exporter, the USSR has been a net grain importer in half of the years since 1963 (figure 2). Almost all of these imports came from Western hard currency suppliers. Net grain imports were $2.8 billion in 1976, equal to 38 percent of the total deficit in agricultural commodity trade.
- Agricultural trade with the Developed West increased substantially and went into deep deficit during the period of large grain imports in the mid-1960s and in every year since 1969 (figure 3).

The cumulative effect of all three changes is that agricultural commodity trade has been a primary factor in boosting the Soviet hard currency deficit. Moreover, the wide annual fluctuations in this category have been a serious destabilizing factor in Soviet trade. Agricultural commodity trade with the hard currency countries has been in deficit every year and in the 1970s has been equivalent to at least one-half the size of the total hard currency deficit.

<sup>2</sup> All values of this report are in current ruble prices, converted to dollars at the official exchange rate.

METHODOLOGY

The definition of agricultural commodity trade used in this report is that adopted by the US Department of Agriculture for its compilation of US agricultural trade. Agricultural commodities are nonmarine food products and other products of agriculture that have not passed through complex processes of manufacture, thereby excluding such manufactured products as textiles, cigarettes, forestry products, and distilled alcoholic beverages.<sup>3</sup>

The statistics used in this report are based on data in the official Soviet foreign trade handbooks (Vneshnaya trgovlya), which are then compiled into a computerized data base (Project TRADER) by CIA's Office of Economic Research. In some cases Project TRADER uses the Soviet data as given:

- The Soviet system of commodity classification and nomenclature is used.
- The quantity of goods is expressed in the specific units of measurement adopted in the USSR's Uniform Commodity Nomenclature.
- Exports include exports of Soviet-produced goods and reexports. Imports include goods for consumption and for reexports. Exports and imports also include goods of foreign origin acquired by Soviet foreign trade organizations abroad and exported to other countries without shipment to the USSR.
- The value of the commodities is calculated on the basis of contract prices, reduced to a uniform basis: for exports—FOB Soviet ports or FOB border of the USSR; for imports—FOB foreign ports or FOB border of the country of shipment.

To make the trade data more useful for Western economic analysis, Project TRADER adjusts some Soviet data:

- Current rubles have been converted to dollars at the official exchange rate:

1960	– 1 Ruble = $0.25
1961-1971	– 1 Ruble = 1.1111
1972	– 1 Ruble = 1.2145
1973	– 1 Ruble = 1.3506
1974	– 1 Ruble = 1.3200
1975	– 1 Ruble = 1.3852
1976	– 1 Ruble = 1.3263

As defined by the Annual Report on Exchange Restrictions,
International Monetary Fund

The agricultural commodity data extracted from Project TRADER are arrayed by commodity and country grouping and broken down by exports, imports, and trade balances. Trade by aggregative grouping (total Soviet trade, total agricultural trade, foodstuffs) is given in million US dollars. Trade by commodity is given in both million US dollars and in thousand tons when possible. The most important commodities are listed separately and include:

Grain	Eggs and egg products
Wheat	Refined sugar
Rye	Unrefined sugar
Barley	Meat and meat products
Oats	Fresh/frozen meat and poultry
Corn	Vegetables, fruit and berries
Flour milling products	Legumes
Wheat and rye flour	Coffee, cocoa and tea
Groats	Natural coffee
Rice	Tea
Oilseeds, fruits (industrial use)	Wine
Sunflower seeds	Plant fiber
Vegetable food oils	Cotton fiber and lint
Sunflower oil	Wool
Margarine	Fur and pelts
Milk and dairy products (excluding butter)	Rawhides and leather
Butter	Tobacco raw materials
	Natural rubber

Soviet foreign trade handbooks do not give an exhaustive listing of commodity trade by country. Therefore, total trade in a given commodity may be larger than the sum of this trade by country.
